

"After this voyage, I am much more aware of the most worrisome sides of America - the guns for sale, the creationism. But at the same time my love for this country has deepened too. I think the counterweights against fascism are strong here: The society is sane, the power of public opinion is important, the press is reactive. And strangely, what I saw of darkness in this country has only nourished my desire that America be even better than it is."
